Who hasn't been under the dread fate of God? Here's a novel that looks at just how real the God is (not that I need to say that); nay, a novel that we need to learn lessons from and recognize for its ability to dazzle.

Well, the premise may set off a brief outburst of nervous babbling: "Our first story picks up where history leaves off: the world of 5000 years ago."

"The Gods shall have their servants...." This novel serves as a series of fragments addressing the confines and settings of a "God Time." However, this hides the brilliance on display for those willing to look.

Tolkien is understood to have stated that his non-fictional life began in his mind with the heart of an aged elf. The novelty here is that this heart is hardly aged; rather, it is like a sword that cuts through the universe

The University of Illinois plans to drop more than half its campus brewpubs within three years, while maintaining a beer garden and stopping serving liquor, according to a review of a draft budget obtained by the Peoria Journal Star. University President B. Joseph White also confirmed the changes during a brief news conference Wednesday. The numbers in the $1.7 billion operating budget show the school plans to reduce its campus restaurants, the first phase of a long-range plan to make the campus more pedestrian and destination-driven. Most current beerpubs are slated to be closed by January 2015, according to the budget proposal. A plan for nonresidential dining services was not released because it's not part of the budget process. When the rest of the campus restaurants close, the remaining beerpubs will be turned into enhanced pub grub restaurants. Many students and staff criticized that plan at a public forum earlier this month. Some also questioned the campus restaurant's rising costs, citing its $15 minimum wage. "You can't charge $15 for a cup of coffee. We can't do that here," said university spokesman Geoff Groves. "We want to create some new options for the kids." He wouldn't say exactly how many of the campus restaurants would remain, but under the plan, most of them would have a range of menus that included healthier alternatives such as wraps or pizza. "This is really a step forward for us and to make sure we keep the value proposition at the University of Illinois," said Groves, who works in the vice president's office. "We have to provide a healthy option for students." U of I and the Champaign-Urbana campus also have two of only three on-campus beer venues for students and faculty. The university already has more restaurants than it does on-campus housing. Outside of Champaign-Urbana, there are 13 U of I-owned restaurant locations, including four in the southern Illinois cities of Carbondale, Murphysboro, Henderson and Sparta. In Champaign, the campus has the University Golf Course Bar & Grill, the pre-dinner restaurant known for its sandwiches. Harlow doesn't question university officials' timing for the changes. "If they need to upgrade their operations, they need to do that." The
