Introduction

The Department of Defense (DOD) is reprogramming millions of dollars from its budget for the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to fund research on “youth and aging.” This is the latest example of the Obama administration’s effort to rig the system and ensure that veterans have the best and brightest researchers on the job and, by extension, the well-being of America’s veterans. “This report shows that the decisions that those funding the research have been making, that they are going to take care of research that our government is already spending money on, are made with the full knowledge of Department of Defense officials,” said Brad Carson, who was the chief scientist at the Pentagon for twenty-seven years and holds a PhD in electrical engineering from Cornell University. Despite the Obama administration’s apparent desire to help veterans, recent studies show that the VA still struggles with major challenges. A 2011 report from the Government Accountability Office on the government’s “veterans’ health program” found that the VA’s transition to a new electronic medical record system slowed the time it took for veterans to receive care, causing many to wait between 26 and 81 days for their first appointment. In 2010, The Center for Public Integrity reported that a study by the VA’s undersecretary of health found that the number of veterans who were not receiving care within 30 days of their appointment doubled. What's more, the VA received more than $77 million from the DOD for research in fiscal year 2012, according to a recent report in the Washington Post. Despite the gluttony of funds, the VA's research doesn't pay off. A 2010 study by the VA's inspector general found that the agency had spent more than $1 billion on research to "diagnose" emotional problems in veterans that didn't have them. It is these false treatments and diagnoses that continue to exist in the VA system - not to mention the fact that research "funded" by the DOD doesn't receive the best scientific vetting
